1. INTRODUCTION

The processes of globalization, uniting the whole world and erasing state borders, actively occur in the modern world. The system of world economy turns into the single market in which transnational corporations rule. Globalization affects not only the economic sphere, but also other spheres of human life: policy, education, science, religion, culture, and so forth. However, the processes of globalization have not only positive consequences, but also negative.

In the process of integration of the international community into a common economic space, each state has the actual problem of preserving its own unique identity, including cultural. There is a westernization problem at each of the states when the nation begins to neglect the cultural heritage and traditions, and cultural wealth is replaced with values and mentality, which are not inherent in this nation. In these conditions, the questions how to preserve national spiritual and valuable directions and not to lose the achievements of cultural heritage, gain primary value for all countries of the world in the conditions of globalization. There is a necessity not only to preserve, but also to develop national culture and to advance, popularize it in world space, in order to declare about itself and create a certain image.

Regarding the positioning of the place in the international community, Kazakhstan established a reputation as the responsible and popular international partner in the solution of regional and global problems and also as a standard of peacefulness thanks to the global peacemaking initiatives of the Head of state (NAZARBAYEV, 2017).

The presidency of Kazakhstan in OSCE, SCO, OIC, and CSTO is evidence of the international trust and the authority of our country as leader in ensuring global and regional security. The multifaceted foreign policy of the country and ability of Kazakhstan to position itself on the international scene thanks to support of multilateralism and regional initiatives, a position on the denuclearization and its prestigious campaigns in the West and in Asia, unique geopolitical location between Europe and Asia, cause similar trust to Kazakhstan from the international community. Similar success of Kazakhstan led to strengthening of its geopolitical role in the region (GARCÍA-SANTILLÁN, 2019).

Regarding the modernization of social, economic, and political institutes, Kazakhstan chose its own way of development. The socio-political and economic transformation of Kazakhstan after gaining its independence in 1991 is defined by the President of Kazakhstan NAZARBAYEV (2000) as process of three consecutive modernizations. The first modernization of Kazakhstan took place after the collapse of the USSR and gaining its independence of the country by transition from planned economy to market economy. The second modernization of Kazakhstan is connected with implementation of the Strategic program of the country development Kazakhstan-2030 and creation of the new capital of Astana (WERNER & BARCUS, 2010).

In the Address to the nation of Kazakhstan The third modernization of Kazakhstan: the global competitiveness, NAZARBAYEV (2017) notes:

Two successful modernizations gave us invaluable experience. Now we have to step safely forward and begin the Third modernization. It is necessary to create a new model of economic growth which will provide global competitiveness of the country (NAZARBAYEV, 2017: 17).

Regarding preserving political and legal, spiritual and cultural specifics of the national state according to the programmatic article of the President of Kazakhstan NAZARBAYEV (2000). Besides, VILLALOBOS (2018) points out that:

Every political force is already possessed of a moral force, because all political power serves the circumstances of good; so that if he is not able to produce it, then it means that his moral forces are exhausted or not present for action. (pag.13)
A look into the future: modernization of public consciousness, it was planned the modernization of public consciousness, including the measures for preservation and distribution of spiritual cultural heritage of Kazakhstan. It is not enough social and economic and political reforms for the creation of new competitive model of economy, great attention must be paid to culture, cultural wealth, national traditions and national identity. According to the Head of state Nazarbayev:

I am convinced: the large-scale transformations, begun by us, have to be followed by the advancing modernization of public consciousness. It will not just add the political and economic modernization - it will act as their core (NAZARBAYEV, 2000: 19).

It means that the program to Rukhani Zhangyru, aimed at the development and distribution of spiritual and cultural potential, acts as the tool of cultural policy of Kazakhstan, promoting formation of soft power in the system of the international relations (ERIKSEN, 1993).

4. CONCLUSION

As can be seen from the description of the results of implementation of the program Rukhani Zhangyru, Kazakhstan started to the creation of independent foreign cultural policy. From the moment of independence gaining as the young state, Kazakhstan had no time for culture. There was a task of high priority – the former socialist country had to pass to market economy, to provide economic stability, to build new political system and to take the place in the international political community. It was necessary to show to the whole world that we are not only independent country, but the country with the political views. While these problems had been solving, culture potential in foreign policy was not used practically by Kazakhstan.

Now, in a present point of development of Kazakhstan for the achievement of the purposes, it is time uses of soft power in addition to political and economic methods. It is time to remember about spiritual and cultural heritage that was promoted by the state program Madeni Mura, within which, there were realized the measures for restoration and preservation of historical and cultural heritage of the country, cultural traditions. The corresponding foundation was prepared for building of the cultural policy of Kazakhstan. Implementation of the program Rukhani Zhangyru was the following step to building up of internal and to forming of foreign cultural policy. Thus, Kazakhstan passed to the systemic developing soft power, having declared about itself not only in political arena, but also on cultural, and it was necessary to show the potential of cultural resources.
At the same time, it is necessary to consider the fact that in the conditions of globalization the transnational corporations find the increasing power, which is turned the whole world into united market space. During an era of the increasing culture of consumption the marketing tendencies are relevant, including questions of formation not only brands of the companies but also the countries – so-called national branding. And successfully pursued foreign cultural policy influences on formation of a positive brand of the country. As ANHOLT (2012) told in his interview, who was the first in formulating the idea about the concept of national branding: Culture is very important in national branding: people respect only those countries which respect themselves. And this self-respect is based on national culture [8].

The Head of state NAZARBAYEV (2017) marked out "The seven aspects of the Great steppe" for strengthening of foreign cultural policy and branding: the horse-rider's culture, ancient metallurgy of the Great steppe, animal style, the Golden man, a cradle of the Turkic world, the Great silk way, Kazakhstan – is the homeland of apples and tulips. There were marked out on the basis of these aspects the new projects following the program "Rukhani Zhangyru", such as "Archive-2025", “Park-encyclopedia “Great names of the Great steppe”, Turkic civilization: from the beginnings to the present, The museum of ancient art and technologies of the Great steppe Uly dala, The anthology of steppe folklore, etc.
Summing up the results, it is possible to tell with confidence that Kazakhstan realizes foreign cultural policy, in spite of the fact that the country does not highlight it as the separate state program or the concept. And on this path, there is great number of opportunities for Kazakhstan, so, in the case of a competent and systematic approach there is a unique potential for the formation of national branding. It will allow strengthening the political position of Kazakhstan in world political arena.
